SECTION 1: READING COMPREHENSION

[4] The impacts of extreme weather are greater in poorer countries. In India, the temperature peaked at 48.8 C in April, the warmest anywhere in the world that month, and nearly half the country is now affected by drought. There have already been 9,000 wildfires, and the biggest famine relief says that more than 3.5 million farmers are on the brink of bankruptcy because they cannot feed their cattle or grow crops. Wherever you look, the climate appears to be in overdrive, with stronger weather patterns gripping large areas for longer and events veering between extremes. Last year, according to US meteorologist Jeff Masters, 17 countries experienced record temperatures. Colombia, Peru, Cuba, Kenya, Somalia and many other countries have all registered far more or less rainfall or major heat waves in the past few years, he says. Kuwait has seen temperatures in excess of 50 C and Rajasthan in India 49.6 C, while parts of Canada, including Toronto, have been sizzling at a record 33 C.

(5) Rich countries may be more or less immune in the short term because the global trading system guarantees food, and access to electricity allows air conditioning, but in parts of Ethiopia, Kenya and Somalia, millions of people this year have little or no food left after successive poor rainy seasons. Skeptics argue that there have always been temperate extremes, but what concerns most climate scientists and observers is that the extreme weather events are occurring more frequently, their intensity is growing and the trends all suggest long-term change as greenhouse gases steadily build in the atmosphere.

(6) "It is abundantly clear that weather-related disaster risks have become a real problem in some of the world's poorest countries," said Steve Jean, the author of a report that was a part of the 'Global Warming' as the best way to describe "that we're facing. We are used to certain patterns, and there's a going on these days that is not what we're used to. It's inside our current range of variability," says climate scientist Katharine Hayhoe of Texas Tech University. "It's almost impossible to get people to accept the science and say they were caused by climate change," she said. But she said the science is clear, as reported at Duke University. The World Meteorological Organization (WMO) said that global warming is now returning to something approaching a normal level, but it is still a problem.

A. Choose the correct answer

- The author of the text is primarily concerned with...
 A. food shortage in developing countries
 B. the adverse effect of climate change
 C. the adverse effect of climate change
- "Climate roller coaster" really...
 A. weather upheaval
 B. global warming
 C. global warming

B. Are these statements true (T) or false (F) according to the text?

- In 2010, the price of wheat and other foods in Eastern Europe rose sharply because of the drought in Russia. (T)
- The Chinese succeeded in making rain by shooting rockets into the sky. (F)
- The WMO is sure that global weather will return to normal level by 2015. (F)

C. Answer these questions.

- What has made the weather so unpredictable in Britain?
- What was a extreme weather in the West of Europe in 2010?
- What negative effects could the drought in Russia have on the world?
- Why is Katharine Hayhoe in a difficult position as a scientific explanation for the global change in the weather?
