EXAM INSTRUCTIONS

It is important that you read carefully these instructions before you start your exam.

- This test is divided into two independent sections:
 - Section I: Text analysis
 - Section II: Language
- Make sure you get the right number of pages mentioned in the first page.
- Before looking at the actual questions, read carefully the rubrics or instructions.
- Use the exam sheets carefully and cleanly. Only one exam paper will be provided.
- No draft paper will be provided. You can use the back of the test sheets as a draft.
- You must write your answer in the space provided for each question. The spaces are on the right of the sheet as in this example → 00 00
- For multiple-choice questions, you must select the correct answer from the choices given and write the corresponding capital letter (A, B, C, D, ...) in the space provided for each question. Don't write the whole answer.
- For true or false questions, write either T or F in the provided space. No justification is required.
- Responses to all items are scored on a scale of 1 point except items 110, 111, 112, 113, and 114 which are scored 2 points.
- If you decide to change an answer, completely erase your old answer and then write the new one.
- You are not allowed to use any electronic devices or documents during the exam session, nor communicate with anyone other than board personnel.

It has long been a painful rite of passage for German schoolchildren – learning “die Schreifschrift”, a fiddly form of joined-up handwriting all pupils are expected to have mastered by the time they leave primary school. But many German teachers have had enough, insisting it is a waste of time to force children to learn a cursive script when they have already learned to print letters at kindergarten. Furthermore, they say, the joined-up handwriting is often illegible.

The national primary schoolteachers’ union has started a campaign to abolish compulsory teaching of Schreifschrift. “It’s completely unnecessary, a deadweight tradition,” according to the union’s deputy chairman, Ulrich Hecker. He wants other states to follow Hamburg’s lead, which recently took the rather radical step of introducing a new, easier alphabet called “die Grundschrift” that can take children all the way from tracing their first letters to full fluency in adulthood.

It is an idea some German scholars consider culturally traitorous. “Joined-up handwriting trains fine motor skills, develops [a sense for] aesthetics. An apparently easier script also simplifies thoughts. I would mourn the loss of a piece of our writing culture,” Dr Hans Kaufmann, regional head of the Society for German Language in Hamburg, told Bild newspaper.

When they start school, most German children begin by getting to grips with holding a pencil and then printing individual letters. At the end of the first year they are then introduced to the cursive script. “It means they have to learn two scripts one after another, which wastes time and interrupts the learning process,” said Hecker. “With Grundschrift, they start with one script and stick with it.”

Whereas some countries do not have a national script, Germany has developed its own style of handwriting. Before the Second World War, Germans wrote in the highly decorative Sütterlin script.

In 1933, West German children began to be taught “lateinische Ausgangsschrift”, a more legible joined-up script. Over in East Germany, the “Schulausgangsschrift” (model school script) was introduced. When the two Germanies became one, the handwriting was also unified, and since 1993 the “Vereinfachte Ausgangsschrift” (simplified model script) has been on the syllabus.

Text 2

Traditionally, many linguists stressed the importance of mastering grammar structures first while teaching English. In recent years, the majority of educators have become more aware of the fallacy of this approach and other approaches promoting vocabulary development have gained popularity. It has been found that without vocabulary to put on top of the grammar system, the learners can actually say very little despite being able to manipulate complex grammatical structures in exercise drills.

It is obvious that to learn English, one needs to learn many words. Native speakers have a vocabulary of about 20,000 words but foreign learners of English need far fewer. They need only about 5,000 words to be quite competent in speaking and listening. The reason for this seemingly small number is the nature of words and the frequency with which they appear in a language. It seems clear that frequent words should be among the first words to learn because they will be met most often and will be needed in speech or writing.

Adapted from: www.grammarbank.com

Choose the best answer.

15. According to the passage, it is true that while learning English, one 15
- cannot achieve competency in language skills just through mastering grammar structures.
 - needs to be taught at least 20,000 words to communicate with foreigners easily.
 - must focus on practicing as many grammar structures as possible according to contemporary language teaching approaches.
 - should first try to develop his understanding of written texts.
16. According to the passage, when the approaches to English language teaching are taken into 16 consideration,
- the best method is the one which focuses on developing the learners' speaking and listening skills first.
 - each method has its own strong and weak points.
 - the ones emphasizing the importance of developing learners' vocabulary is gaining ground.
 - recent approaches haven't proved to be effective in language teaching so far.
17. It is stated in the passage that 17
- a great number of educators today believe that mastering grammar points is more important than learning words while studying a foreign language.
 - grammar drills are effective in teaching the most frequently encountered English words.
 - an approach based on mastering grammar structures first to teach English is in vogue
18. The phrase "the fallacy of this approach" suggests that the approach is 18
- misleading.
 - effective.
 - out dated.
 - popular.
